By F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Continued from Yesterday. On Anthony's part she was, in spite of these qualifications, his sole preoccuaption. Had he lost her he would have been a broken man, wretchedly and sentimentally ab-sorbed in her memory for the re-mainder of life. He seldom took pleasure in an entire day spent alone with her-except on occasions he preferred to have a third person with them. There were times when he felt that if he were not left abschifely alone he would go mad-there were a few times when he definitely hated her. In his cups he was capable of short attractions toward other women, the hitherto-suppressed outcroppings of an experimental temperament. That spring, that summer, they had speculated upon future happiness—how they were to travel from summer land to summer land, returning eventually to a gorgeous estate and possible idyllic children. then entering diplomacy or politics to accomplish, for a while, beautiful and important things, unti finally as a white-haired (beautifully, silkily, white-haired) couple they were to loll about in serene glory, worshipped by the bour-geoisie of the land... These times were to begin "when we get our money:" it was on such dreams rather than on any satisfaction with their increasingly irregular, in-creasingly dissipated life that their hope rested. On gray mornings when the jests of the night before had shrunk to ribaldries without wit or dignity, they could, after fashion, bring out this batch of common hopes and count them over, then smile at each other and repeat by way of clinching the matter, the terse yet sincere Nietzscheanism of Glorfa's defiant "I don't care!"

Things had been slipping percep-bly. There was the money question, increasingly annoying, in-creasingly ominous; there was the realization that liquor had become practical necessity to their amusement-not an uncommon phe-nomenon in the British aristocracy of a hundred years ago, but a some. what alarming one in a civilization steadily becoming more temperate and more circumspect. Moreover, of them seemed vaguely weaker in fibre, not so much in what they did as in their subtle reactions to the civilization about them. In Gloria had been born something that she had hitherto never needed—the skeleton, incomplete but nevertheless unmistak-able, of her ancient abhorrence, a conscience. This admission to herself was coincidental with the slow decline of her physical courage. Then, on the August morning after Adam Patch's unexpected call, they awoke, nauseated and tired, dispirited with life, capable only of one pervasive emotion—fear.

"Well:" Anthony sat up i

Her reply was to raise her hand to her mouth and begin a slow, pre-cise nibbling at her finger. "We've done it," he said after a pause; then, as she was still silent, he became exasperated. "Why don't you say something""

She was speculating as to whether or not their guests would have the ocumen to leave directly after breakfast.

Nor for a week did Anthony muster the courage to go to Tarrytown. The prospect was revolting and left alone he would have been incapable of making the trip-but if his will had deteriorated in these past three years, so had his power to resist urging. Gloria compelled him to go. It was all very well to wait a week, she said, for that would give his grandfather's violent animosity time to cool-but to wait longer would be an error-it would give it a chance to harden.

He went, in trepidation . . . and vainly. Adam Patch was not well, said Shuttleworth indignantly. Postrive instructions had been given

SIX GLASSES A DAY

There are two very important reasons for cultivating the water drinking habit. First, because it is highly essential in overcoming that curse of American girls and women-constipation. Any physician will indorse the statement that constipation is the cause of 75 per cent of the physical ills from which mankind suffers and as equally high a percentage of beauty ills. And secondly, because it is the best treatment known to prevent unpleasant personal odors.

Agent for Elimination. There are two very important

"The only real exception to death by poison is when we are killed by physical violence," writes one medical authority. "The life processes produce poisons as byproducts. Were it not for the liver, the kidneys howels and skin. the kidneys, bowels and skin, which eliminate poisons, we would speedily die. When germs kill us it is chiefly by the poisons which they generate." You see, therefore, how impor-

You see, therefore, how impor-tant it is to eliminate as thorough-ly and promptly as possible such poisons as are unavoidably intro-duced into the body. The chief or-gans for such elimination are the kidneys and the bowels, and water is the chief agent for the elimina-tion. on. Every portion of your body, including the bones, can be in a state of good health only when constantly supplied with fresh water. The blood needs a con-tinuous supply of it, and if it does not get its required quota else-where it will absorb water from the colon or other tissues, thereby receiving poisons as well as leav-ing the bowels dry and consti-

Weather reports and with constipation." he said. "But a system has to be poison free in or-der to promote good blood circula-tion, and that's what the hair must feed upon, after all. The scalp is nourished by the blood."

"People who have lived under fairly strict hygienic conditions." he further confided, "often experience a remarkable increase of health and energy for attending systematically to this simple but important water drinking habit."

Start in Slowly.

This is a good time of year to get the habit. If it is too much to ask of your appetite to take six glasses right away after years, per-haps, of neglect, begin with two or three the first week, add a fourth the second, and so on until you can take the six glasses a day with a relish. There is no advantage in taking more than this amount do not want to overwork the kid-neys or overburden the stomach. Some may find eight glasses a day Some may find eight glasses a day easy to take, but six is enough. You may even take water with your meals, provided it is not taken when food is in the mouth. For constipation, however, it is better taken when the stomach is empty. Particularly before breakfast you are urged to drink a glass or two, then between meals and before retiring. But drink in such quantities as to prevent the absorption of the colon poisons into the blood.
